Silent Poetry.

Hymn to the People.

By C. E. STANTON.

Not to be lost with warrior strength,
To wield the sword and wear the glaive,
Or rise to conqueror's fame at length,
Proclaims the good or makes the brave.

To have the power to hide the scars,
And rise above the state and tribe,
Of wealth to wealth and this home life.
The crowd it damaged on our life.

What are the words that prop a king—
The banners in his army's van—
To strength of soul, that dares to spring
And show the monarch in the man?

Kings and the mightiest men of arms,
Strong as the hands of realms they bide,
Sport as they may with fortune's charms,
They like leaves upon the tide.

In dim old sepulchres they lie,
The feast of silence and decay,
While the true world-beat beats high
And thrones itself upon to-day.

Give me the man whose hands have toiled
The earth to the mallow soil,
Woods feel the forest depths have crossed,
Whose brow is nighly crowded with toil.

THE HIDDEN HAND.

Author of "The Bride of Evening," "Deserter Wife," &c., &c., &c.

"Have you got through?" asked the man at the door, rapping impatiently.

"No, no," said I, as directed.

"He required him tramping up and down and I went back to my patient. She beckoned me to come close, and whispered—

"Save my child! I living one I mean!

Hide her! oh, hide her from him! When he demands the babe, give him the poor little dead one—he cannot hurt that. And he will not know there was another. Oh, hide and save my child!"

"Master, I used to quer doings, but this was a little the queerest. But if I was to conceal that second child in order to save it, it was necessary to stop its mouth, for it was squalling like a wild-cat. So I took a pistol from my pocket and gave it a drop, and it went off to sleep like an angel. I wrapped it up warm, and lay it along with my shawl and bonnet, in a dark corner. Just then the man rapped again.

"Come in, master," said I.

"No, bring me the babe," he said.

"I took up the dead infant. Its mother kissed its brow, and dropped tears upon its little cold face; and I carried it to the man outside."

"Is it asleep?" the villain asked me.

"Yes, master," said I, as I put it well wrapped up in his arms, "very sound asleep."

"So much the better," said the knave, walking away.

"I bolted the door, and went back to my patient. With her free hand she seized mine and pressed it to her lips, and then held up her left hand, pointed to the wedded ring upon her third finger.

"Draw it off and keep it," she said; "conceal the child under your shawl, and take her with you when you go; save her, and your fortune shall be made."

"I declare, master, I hadn't time to think before I heard one of them wretches rap at the door."

"Come! get ready to go," he said.

"She also beckoned me. I hastened to her. With eager whispers and imploring gestures, she prayed me to take her ring and save her child.

"But you said I—who is to attend you?"

"I do not know nor care! Save her!"

The rapping continued. I ran to the corner where I had left my things. I put on my bonnet, made a sort of sling around my neck of the silk handkerchief, opened the large little sleeping babe there. Then I folded my big shawl around my breast and nobody my the wiser. The rapping was very impudent.

"I am coming," said I.

"Remember," whispered the poor girl.

"I will," said I, and went and opened the door. There stood the other willian with his hand covered with black crepe. I dreamt of nothing but black-headed demons for six months afterward."

"Are you ready?" says he.

"Yes, your worship," says I.

"Come along, then."

"And binding another silk handkerchief round my eye, he led me along."

"Instead of my mule, a carriage stood near the horse-block."

"Get in," says he, holding the pistol to my ears by way of an argument."

I got in. He jumped upon the driver's seat, and we drove like the wind. In another direction from which we came, in course, for there was no carriage road there. The carriage whirled along at such a rate it made me quite giddy. At last it stopped again. The man in the mask got down and opened the door.

"Where are you taking me?" says I.

"Be quiet," says he, "or—"

"And that he put the pistol to my cheek, and ordered me to get out, took the bandage from my eyes, and walk before him. I did so, and saw dimly that we were in a part of the country that I was never at before—

We were in a dark road through a thick forest. On the left side of the road, in a clearing, stood an old house; a dim light was burning in a lower window.

"Go on in," said the willian, putting the pistol to the back of my head. At the door stood ajar, I went in to a narrow dark passage, the man all the while at my back. He opened a door on the left side, and made me go into a dark room. Just then the unfortunate chit, that had been moving restlessly, began to wail. Well, it might poor started thing.

"It isn't nothing, sir," says I, "and 'busht' is the body." But the poor little wretch raised a squall.

"What is the meaning of this?" says he.

Where did that child come from? Why the demon don't you speak?" and with that he pointed me again by the scruff of the neck and shook me.

"Oh, master, for the love of heaven don't, says I, this is only a poor, unfortunate infant as its parents wanted to get out of the way and shirk me to take care on—And I have had it wrapped up under my shawl all the time 'cept when I wash your house, who I put it to sleep in the corner.

"Humph! and you had that child concealed under your shawl when I first stopped you in the woods."

"In course, master," says I.

"What is it?"

"Master, says I, 'tis—it's a dead secret, for I hadn't another like it ready."

"He broke out into a scowl, snarled laugh, and seemed not half believe me, and yet did not to care about questioning me too closely. He made me sit down then in the dark, and went out and took the key on me—

I to my finger with the parrotos and put it to the baby's lip, to quiet its pain of hunger. Then I heard a whispering in the next room. Now my eyeight never was good, but to make up for it, I believe I had the sharpest ears that ever was, and I don't think anybody could have heard that whispering but me. I saw a little glimmer of light through the shawl that showed me where the door was, and so I crept up to it and put my ear to the key-hole. Still they whispered so low that no ears could hear them but my own sharp ones. They were talking about selling some woman and child. I should ay been uneasy if they hadn't called the woman Kate. My willian offered 'em for fifty dollars, but his father would give a cent. He told my willian, as he called Captain, that he'd take them off his hands and no more. And then they threatened each other, and went out of my hearin'.

And in the morrow the old willian came and took me and the child off in a shay, and drove down a long way to the beach, and haled a vessel on the river, and took us aboard and sold us to the captain right afore my eyes, and then went ashore, and we was carried off to sea, though I cried, and 'splained, and 'postulated all the time.

"Now, sir, came a strange providence, which the very thoughts of it might convert a heathen. We had to sea about five days when a dreadful storm riz. I tell you, master, that looked like the wrath of God. I hugged the baby to my breast, and went to pray as hard as ever I could pray.

"Presently I felt an awful shock, as if heaven and earth had come together, and then everybody screaming. 'She's struck! She's struck!' I felt the vessel trembling like a live creature, and the water pourin' everywhere. I hugged the babe, and scrambled up the companion-way to the deck. It was pitch dark, and I heard every man rushing toward one side of the vessel.

"A flash of lightning, that made everything as bright as day again, showed me that they were all taking to the boat. I rushed after, callin' to them to save me and the baby. But no one seemed to hear me—they were all too busy trying to save themselves and keep others out of the boat, and cursing and swearing and hollering that there was no room—that the boat would be swamped, and so on. The end was, that all who could crowd into the boat did so. And me and the baby and a poor sailor and the black cook were left behind to perish.

"So much the better," said the knave, walking away.

"I bolted the door, and went back to my patient. With her free hand she seized mine and pressed it to her lips, and then held up her left hand, pointed to the wedded ring upon her third finger.

"To such, as the most inviolable scruples, and from his principles of honor, he turned his back.

SATURDAY, FEB. 19, 1859.

DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET.

FOR GOVERNOR,

HON. JOHN LETCHER,

OF ROCKBRIDGE.

HON. DAVID GOV. GOV. GOV. GOV.

ROBERT L. MONTAGUE,

OF MIDDLEBURY.

FOR ATTORNEY GENERAL,

J. RANDOLPH TUCKER,

OF FREDERICK.

DEMOCRATIC Meeting.

There will be a Democratic Meeting in the Court-House, on the first day of February, 1859.

At which a Convention in the district for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Congress, to supply the place of the Hon.

John Letcher. We hope there will be a full meeting, as we wish a fair expression of opinion.

John Letcher and the People of the Youth Legion.

The association of Wm. L. Goggin by the opposition convention, which met in Richmond, presents the question of who shall be their next Governor, practically and definitely to the minds of the people of Virginia. It is now for them to say whether or they will support a tried and trusted public servant, who has done great and valued service to the State, and who has long borne, and is more extraordinary in these times of degenerate politicians, deserved the声誉 of "honest." And for whom?—

For a man, who in himself, presents no

claims to transcendent worth and ability,—

for the nominees of a party whose name indicated its fundamental and sole principle of opposition to everything which exists, whether good or bad—whose only aim is to undermine and wrench us from our present system of politics and government, without a thought of substituting anything in its place, whether good, bad or indifferent.

Edmund Burke, with masterly irony described the French Revolutionists as "magnificent architects of ruin." The same well applies to the platform of the Know Nothing party.

See the records of its members, read

the platform laid down by its convention, and say does not everything portend ruin and misery, and is there anything which justifies a re-construction of the scattered elements of Government?

But it is the people of the Youth Legion

to whom we especially appeal, to rally around their long trusted and favorite statesmen. What is the issue, the only issue, which will be made against Mr.

Letcher in this canvass? It is that he was in 1857 of the opinion that slavery was a political evil in Western Virginia,—that that slave labor did not pay. Now we bold

it up to the people of Western Virginia, did not a large majority of you think with him

at that time? and now are you willing to condone yourselves unbound on that vital question, by tacitly assenting by your votes

for the post of Governor of slaveholding Virginia, because of his exclusive opinion which was suspected and approved by you? We request, will the people of Western Virginia so strenuously and stoutly themselves? If it not to them into what an awkward and unfortunate position the opposition

will have to place themselves?

If it is the people of the Youth Legion who have not their soundings on this question, bear over and over again confession by the people of the Youth Legion, of all soundings by its reported election to Congress? Have not the democracy invariably voted him en masse, and a majority of the people endorsed him, even when one of their own party was in the field? Now, if Mr.

Letcher is sound enough for Congress,

is not a sound enough for Governor?

Western Virginians, so stolidly resigned as to say to the country, "we have repeatedly endorsed this man's political opinions, — we have repeatedly aided him, to send him to Congress, even when one from among us was his opponent,

but holding him unseated on the most xi-

til moment of the day, we are unwilling to confess ourselves

as abolitionists for fifteen years? We are still here.

People of Virginia.

The object presented by the ladies is their 2nd to be held on the 22d, is a very commodious one and very deserving of the support of all people both of the town and country. The object of the fair is to assist the Company, not because of inability, but because any assistance rendered in this way would tend much of encouragement to the young men of the Company, for where is the young man so lost to self respect, that he would not retribute his diligence, with the rewards of the fair success about him.

As a consequence, though, almost past the scope of our paper, we always feel like running higher and bowing lower and lower generally when the eyes of the ladies are upon us. Then come the young men of the Company.

It is a long letter.
