Selected Portry. The Treasure Seckeer

Dis halfed, by Goethe, translated by P

Many weary days I suffered Sick of heart and powe of purse.

Bichos are the greatest blessing,
Forcety the deepest curse!

Til at last to dig treasure

Forth I went into the wood; 'Frend, my soul is thine forever,'
And I signed the scroll with blood

Then I drew the magic circles,

And I saw a light appearing in the dutance like a star; When the nidmight hour was to-ling, Came it wasing from alar, Came it flashing swift and nodden, And if nery wins it were. Flowing from an open chalics. Which a brantous boy did bear.

And he wore a lustrous chaplet, And his eyes were full of thought, And his ever were full of thought, And his stepped into the circle With the radiance that his brought, And his tade me haste the gradet, And I thought it cannot be That this boy should be the beater Of the demon's gift to me.
